Part IV: Narrative Description of Activities of Tidepool

A. Introduction

Tidepool is a non-profit organization dedicated to building an open software platform and applications that will help people with diabetes manage their disease better and lead to healthier outcomes.

B. Background

Diabetes is a chronic disease for which management requires ongoing collection, integration, and analysis of health related information in order to optimize treatment and effect behavior changes.

Current for-profit solutions for management of diabetes data and information are closed, vertical and proprietary. This impedes innovation and prevents people with diabetes from receiving the best care and treatment possible. For example, current systems do not allow patients and their doctors to view data from glucose monitors and insulin pumps made by different manufacturers in a coherent, integrated fashion. This makes it very challenging, if not impossible, for doctors and patients to analyze the information and optimize treatment regimens.

C. Key Activities

Tidepool is developing a software platform and applications that will allow doctors to provide the best possible care to their patients with diabetes. The ultimate goal of Tidepool is to help people with diabetes. Building an open software platform is our means to that end goal.

The Tidepool platform will facilitate data collection and storage, foster open data and protocol standards, and provide secure access for patients and their health care providers. Our software solutions will make diabetes data acquisition, visualization and interpretation more seamless, intuitive and actionable. Our open platform will be valuable to clinicians and researchers who are establishing new software-driven treatments, as they will not need to “reinvent the wheel.”

Tidepool will develop its software using an open development model, leveraging a vibrant, motivated open development community. We will make our software and services available for free to other non-profit entities and researchers. We believe that being a nonprofit and developing an open software platform is necessary to encourage the broad adoption of the platform as well as to encourage adoption of open data and protocol standards.

Tidepool is currently staffed by a small number of volunteers including health care providers, diabetes specialists, software engineers, and business professionals. We are soliciting funding from philanthropic donors who share our desire for better applications and an open platform and data standards for diabetes care. We will hire a small staff of software developers to catalyze development efforts and to help organize the open development community’s efforts.

Eventually, Tidepool intends to provide its software and services to for-profit entities that wish to adopt the elements of the Tidepool platform. Fees to for-profit entities will be at fair market value, to be ascertained at the time that we make the software and services available. Any revenue generated from these licensing activities will be used to cover operating expenses and reduce the need to conduct ongoing philanthropic fundraising.

Part V, Question 3a

All current employees and officers are volunteers and are not compensated. As fundraising efforts proceed, compensation for employees will be determined using comparative analysis of other non-profit software development entities and will require board compensation committee approval.

Part VI, Questions 1a and 1b

The software platform and reference applications developed by Tidepool will be openly available to all via an open source repository like GitHub. The efforts undertaken by Tidepool are beneficial to all people with diabetes.

The regulatory environment for medical software is undergoing a rapid transformation. For example, recently Congress held hearings to review the regulatory process for mobile medical applications.¹ At this point, it is undetermined if Tidepool will directly distribute software to patients, but Tidepool will pursue regulatory approval if necessary. It is possible that clinics and other entities will adopt the Tidepool platform and pursue regulatory approval outside of Tidepool.

In either case, Tidepool will make its software platform available to any organization that wishes to adopt it. These organizations may perform human trials as required by their own Institutional Review Boards and to satisfy regulatory review requirements, such as with the FDA.

By way of example, a pediatric endocrinology department at a non-profit research institution may choose to adopt and use the Tidepool platform as part of a trial to test the effectiveness of a technology-assisted diabetes treatment program. Tidepool will provide a royalty-free license to such a non-profit research institution. It will be up to the institution to conduct this trial under oversight of its own Institutional Review Board.

Similarly, a for-profit entity, such as a medical device manufacturer, may choose to adopt and use the Tidepool platform as part of its for-profit offerings. At that point, Tidepool would collect fees from the for-profit entity based on the fair market value of the services and support provided by Tidepool at the time. This revenue will in turn be used to cover Tidepool's costs of operations and to reduce the need for ongoing philanthropic fundraising.

Part VIII, Question 4a

The founders of Tidepool are well connected to members of the technical and medical communities, especially in the San Francisco Bay Area. We are using our personal and professional connections to solicit philanthropic donations. We will not be "cold calling" unknown people.

We also expect to solicit funding in the form of grants and donations from organizations that fund efforts to develop better technology to treat diabetes. These include the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation (JDRF), the Helmsley Charitable Trust, the American Diabetes Association (ADA) and the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Tidepool also expects to apply for government grants, such as from the National Institutes of Health (NIH). Of particular interest will be grants focused around meaningful use of medical data and mobile health applications.

In addition, Tidepool will provide a mechanism for donations on our website.

Part VIII, Question 4a

Our fundraising efforts will primarily be focused around these areas:
San Francisco Bay Area, CA – The location of Tidepool, UCSF and most of the founders' professional network.
New York City, NY- Location of JDRF and the Helmsley Charitable Trust.

Tidepool will accept philanthropic donations from wherever they may come.

Part VIII, Question 10

Tidepool will develop new intellectual property during the course of developing its platform and reference applications. Tidepool does not currently plan to file patents to protect its intellectual property. All Tidepool intellectual property will be publicly available without license fee. The software developed by Tidepool will also be freely available.

Tidepool holds copyright to the software it develops. The software source code will be released under a new license, currently under development, that makes it freely available, and requires that systems and devices built atop the Tidepool platform provide for secure patient and doctor access to their medical data.

Service and support fees, determined at fair market value, will be charged to organizations that choose to adopt the Tidepool platform and use our services.

Part VIII, Question 11

Tidepool will accept donations of intellectual property (software code or patents) that is directly related to its mission of providing open source software for diabetes care. For example, if an existing for-profit entity in the field of diabetes technology were to decide to close its operation, it might choose to donate its intellectual property to Tidepool.
